Shocking in my heart their home? Dost thou remember When upon the rapid current Floated swift our fragile boat, How the sparkling waves soft echoed With the wild birds thrilling note? Then thine eyes all fondly beaming, Sought its answer in my own, While my heart throbbed all too deeply E'en to breathe one softened tone.

Dost thou remember How we braided leaves and blossoms For the tembs of loved and last, How our spirits bowed together O'er their silent, mouldering dust? How beneath the pale, sweet mosnlight, Thou didst whisper but one word, Which, though spoke softly, lightly. My soul's deepest fountain stured?

Dost thou remember How when o'er us stars were beaming, Like fond watchers far on high, Thou didst yow to love me only While they lit the azure sky? How my heart-pulse fluttered wildly Thus to win such love as thine, While with childlike trust, my spirit Clasped thee confidently mine?

Dost thou remember How the winds mouned low and plaintive Through the fragrant groves of pine?

Oht to me it whispered sadly

That I never could be thine.

Though with fondness thou wast clasping My cold hand within thine own, Murmuring in mine ear how truly Thou didst love, love me alone?

Dos' thou remember? No, for human faith has foltered From its highest, boliest trust; Love with broken harp is weeping O'er her ruined alter's dust. But the echoes of its musics Dwell amid its severed chords, Never, never more to vibrate To thy magic, siren words.

Mo mare remember How a spirit fond and faithful
Then didst yow to cast aside
For a favored child of beauty,
That may fill thy heart with pride— That may saule and seem to love thee, but thy ardent soul may mock-Oh, beware lest its bright garlands Should but wresth a fearful rock.

No more remember That as incense pure and hely,
Every hour in my prayers arise,
That my strongly gifted spirit
Mine may meet yet in the skies.
And the passion that has blighted Life's best moments, happest hours, May refine, as are, my spirit, Where forever bloom life's flowers.
